

Law as a Weapon of War in 2026

Mr. Orde Kittrie

Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law, Arizona State University

Orde Félix Kittrie is a law professor at the Washington, DC campus of Arizona State University, where he also serves as executive director of the Program on International Lawfare and Security. Kittrie is the author of the landmark book "Lawfare: Law as a Weapon of War" (Oxford University Press), which describes how and why law has become an increasingly powerful and prevalent weapon of war. He has also authored numerous scholarly articles and book chapters in fields including international law, criminal law, nuclear non-proliferation, and international negotiations.

Prior to entering academia, Kittrie served for 11 years at the Department of State, where he received the Superior Honor Award and Meritorious Honor Award. As the department's lead nuclear affairs attorney, Kittrie participated in successfully negotiating five U.S.-Russia nuclear agreements during 15 trips to Moscow. Kittrie also served as director of the department's Office of International Anti-Crime Programs, as lead attorney for export controls, and as special assistant to the Under Secretary of State for Economic and Business Affairs. Earlier, he served as legislative assistant and press spokesman for a Member of Congress.

While serving as a professor, Kittrie has remained active as a practitioner, including by serving from 2019 to 2025 as a part-time advisor on international lawfare issues to NATO's Supreme Allied Commander Europe. In 2021, Kittrie was awarded the Serge Lazareff Prize, bestowed by NATO Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe for exceptional contributions to NATO in the legal arena.

Written Materials Provided at CAAF Website:

- Orde F. Kittrie, Lawfare, China, and the Grey Zone, in HYBRID THREATS AND GREY ZONE CONFLICT (Mitt Regan & Aurel Sari eds., Oxford University Press 2024).